

Nick
Jago

Chief Culture Officer

Nick has been active in the project management community for 20 years across Australia, the UK, and New Zealand, managing and consulting on large, complex infrastructure projects including Sydney Metro, Auckland International Airport, Easing Sydney's Congestion, and programs for School Infrastructure NSW and NSW Ambulance.

He actively involves himself with the industry, regularly presenting at conferences and authoring articles for leading project management publications. He is known for his insightful and entertaining explorations of the human side of projects, and the importance of emotional intelligence.

In his time as Technical Director - Project Management at the global engineering firm Mott Macdonald, Nick took on the role of Project, Program and Commercial Management Practice Lead. This role focused on developing organisational project management maturity and a culture of high-performance through training, upskilling, certification and knowledge sharing across Australia.

Nick is a natural entertainer and educator, blending a comprehensive technical understanding of project management with a humorous and personable approach.

Specialising in:

- Project & Program Management
- PMO set up & operations
- Emotional Intelligence
- Communication & stakeholder engagement
- Enabling difficult conversations
- Team togetherness and uplift of culture

- Fellow, International Project Management Association (IPMA-Australia)
- Master of Project Management, University of Technology Sydney
- Certificate IV in Training and Assessment
- Football Australia AFC C Diploma
- Author of numerous articles on project management, gamified learning, emerging leaders and capability uplift, published in several professional magazines